

Each woman imagines different things to be a source of joy and happiness in her life. Having more wealth or better health, having an ideal husband or good looking children, having one's own home and a smarter car, having model looks or a perfect goal weight, visiting places and shopping . . . the list of never ending imaginations may go on and on. The irony of it all is that even after having all of the above, one is still unhappy. The reason for this can be understood by a simple example. Imagine having a cup of tea with no sugar in it. One may continue stirring the tea but one will not get any sweetness out of it since there is no sugar in the tea. In the same way one may continue passing through the pleasures of this world, but we will not get any happiness out of it, since happiness is not in the material things of this world. Happiness is sealed in the beautiful Deen of our loving Allah Ta'ala.