

Question:

Assalaamu-alaikum.

Please advise me. I am married to a learned person for many years. I was totally on the wrong path when I met him but Alhumdullillah he showed me the way. I stopped communicating with all my male friends and family. I'm making my salaah, fast in ramadaan sit in taleem everyday. We have 5 kids together however he is at all times on his phone with women. He hides his phone from me and it's always on silent if he is at home. Every night he is out with his friends, so I assume. I can't handle it anymore please do advise me on what to do.

Jazakallah Khairan

Answer:

Bismih Ta'ala

Respected Sister

Walaikumus Salaam Warahmatullahi Wabarakatuhu

1. In light of the details that you have mentioned, we suggest that you contact either a senior experienced Aalim who is familiar with your husband or one of your husband's teachers who he may be keeping in contact with. Inform them of the situation and ask them to intervene and talk to your husband. If no such person is available, close by, the other option is to speak to some senior family person who is level headed and can handle the situation in an appropriate manner.

2. Immediately commence ta'lim in the home.

3. Encourage your husband to develop an islaahi (reformation) link with some pious personality.

4. While it is indeed painful to go through this situation, in the interim mask your feelings as best as you can and show extra affection to your husband, in your treatment towards him, in your cooking, dressing, giving of simple gifts, etc. Try to win his heart with affection. It will Insha-Allah turn his heart away from any incorrect contact.

May Allah Ta'ala grant your husband the tawfeeq of abandoning any wrong actions and bless you with true happiness in your marriage.

Was Salaam

(Moulana) Muhammad Ilyas Patel